STORYLINES

Battle in Seattle: The Chicago Stars take on Seattle Reign FC for the second time this season, hoping to earn their first three points since April. Last time the two clubs clashed, they were at Soldier Field in Chicago and played to a 2-2 draw, with Seattle scoring two goals in the last three minutes of regulation. Heading into this match, both teams will have some key changes. For Seattle, the Reign will presumably have the additions of United States Women's National Team players, Mia Fishel and Sofia Huerta. For Chicago, the club added defenders, Sam Angel and Kathrin Hendrich, and made the switch to Ella Masar as interim head coach. Fun fact, Masar's first-ever match as interim head coach in 2023 was against Seattle Reign and their head coach, Laura Harvey. Heading into the Monday night matchup, Seattle has only scored six goals at Lumen Field, while Chicago has scored four goals on the road this season. The two teams both have a 74% passing accuracy, though Chicago has a higher accuracy in longball passes (41 to 36 percent). Seattle has two more assists on the season than Chicago (12 to 10), while Chicago has amassed more total scoring attempts (102 to 92) and corner kick attempts (59 to 56). The Stars and Reign are even in tackles (192) with Chicago holding a slight edge in tackle percentage (63 to 62 percent), though Seattle has an edge in interceptions (158 to 150). As close as the teams are in the stats, the Monday night matchup is sure to be one you won't want to miss.

Talent Abounds: Fans won't find themselves short of star power in this matchup. Each side has more than a few attacking threats, but both clubs also have some defensive stalwarts who could stymie more than a few chances. When it comes to Seattle, Stars Natalia Kuikka and Taylor Malham will have their hands full with Lynn Biyendolo and Mia Fishel, who both have speed that makes them a threat to take seriously. Everyone thinks about Ludmila and the speed she provides when it comes to Chicago's attack, but Shea Groom and Julia Grosso have been proving themselves to be quite deadly in recent matches, with multiple chances from both finally culminating in a goal contribution each in the Stars' most recent homestand. If the trio of Groom, Grosso and Ludmila can break down Seattle's midfield, a relatively young back line is all that's left between the Stars and goalkeeper, Claudia Dickey. While an experienced Huerta has returned to bolster the Reign's defense, will it be enough to stop the Stars if they get on a roll?

Un-Staab-Able: Casual fans tuning into Chicago's last match may have been impressed by a momentum-crushing slide tackle from Stars defender, Sam Staab, that stopped an opportunity for Bay FC in its tracks. Chicago Stars fans, though, are used to such heroics from Staab. The defender consistently patrols Chicago's back line expertly and the Seattle fixture will surely be no different. Comparing the two teams' defense shows Staab performs as well or better than the Reign's defenders, with more chances created by Staab (13) than any other defender on both sides and her 10 blocks on the season tying Seattle's Phoebe McClernon. Those 10 blocks rank Staab sixth in the league and the California native also ranks seventh amongst NWSL players in clearances (87), only trailing the top defenders in the matchup, Jordyn Bugg's and McClernon's 87 clearances by one. Creating on both ends of the pitch, Staab tops Seattle defenders in assists (2) and expected goals (3.82), while tying Bugg for most shots taken by a defender this season (5). Even with the Reign's recent reinforcements, it'll be tough for Seattle to avoid the brick wall that is Sam Staab.
